

Mackenzie Thorpe Monumental Sculpture Exhibition

COMMUNITY OBSERVATIONS

“I believe the exhibit will enhance the City’s reputation as a cultural and artistic center in the Midwest and, indeed, in the country. The Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art, The Kemper Contemporary Museum of Art, The Kansas City Art Institute, The Crossroads Art District, First Fridays and the myriad of other art and cultural centers and activities in the City of Kansas City, Missouri, and the greater metropolitan area will benefit from the publicity the Thorpe exhibit will bring to this area by simply hosting the exhibit. In addition, the exhibit will bring visitors to the City and metropolitan area who might otherwise not travel here, thereby exposing them to the other attractions, both cultural and otherwise, the area has to offer.”

- Honorable Mayor Kay Barnes of Kansas City, Missouri

“I think that having brought Mackenzie Thorpe and his work to Kansas City is important to the city – I think any time that the city has the chance to have this kind of art displayed in a public place like Mill Creek Park is very exciting. It’s the kind of art that I think people will very much enjoy, not only passively, but also by interacting with it, walking around and having their pictures taken with the art and having it be a part of our community. Yesterday, Mackenzie appeared at the Kansas City Art Institute and spoke to the sculpture department. It was very well received and everyone was excited to have someone of Mackenzie’s caliber appear there.”

- Herb Kohn, Chairman, Board of Directors Kansas City Art Institute

“Seeing Mackenzie’s artistic visions so prominently displayed gave me a real “high”. I felt that I was touching the artist’s soul. It was a great exhibition, which I will never forget.”
